Programme Highlight:

BIM (Building Information Modelling) is a term that is buzzing around the building and construction industry - increasingly in work that involves, and is led by, CIBSE members in UK. Since 2011 CIBSE's BIM Steering Group in UK has been working with the UK industry and other groups to deliver non-proprietary BIM solutions. CIBSE have taken the lead in developing support, guidance and specific tools for its development towards digital engineering. The most notable recent example was the development of the BIMHawk online tool to automate the transfer of Product Data Templates into BIM platforms. Digital Engineering Series has been produced in order to assist the full built environment supply chain in tackling the practical challenges, specifically of the BIM processes, of digital engineering more widely. Engineering professionals involved not only in building services but also product design, facilities management, information control etc whose common experience lies in their shared understanding of working in a digital environment.

Our invited Speakers would share their experience, relevant skills and industrial solutions in BIM and Digital Engineering Applications in various aspects ranged from Design, Installation, Operation and Maintenance as well as Facilities Management for Building Services Engineering facilities. We believe that their sharing and practical experience would be beneficial to our engineering industry.
